Application of Loess Plate for the treatment of heavy metal co-contaminated water samples: Free Cu(II) removal; recovery, stability and characterization. This study focuses on the applicability of Loess Plate (Loess P) for co-contaminated water samples. Loess P was found to be an efficient and economic sorbent for the removal of free Cu(II) from seawater, where maximum removal of 16 mM by Loess P was achieved. Loess P can be used as a new low-cost sorbent for efficient purification of industrial effluents, raw water, and seawater. The maximum removal of free Cu(II) at neutral pH was achieved at a Loess P loading of 8 g/L, followed by 4 g/L. Removal efficiency was maximum at a Loess P loading of 4 g/L. Desorption studies, speciation of ions, adsorption kinetics, and regeneration studies were investigated with a view to achieve this maximum removal efficiency. The effects of pH, initial concentration, contact time, ionic strength, and temperature on the removal efficiency were investigated. Removal of free Cu(II) from the sample was found to be maximum at pH = 8.0. The removal of copper was effectively achieved at a Loess P loading of 8 g/L. Removal efficiency was independent of initial concentrations of Cu(II) except at a high initial concentration. The maximum adsorption was  $4.37 \pm 0.01$  mg/g within 10 min, and the equilibrium time was 15 min. Increase in the ionic strength resulted in an increase in the adsorption of Cu(II). The adsorption process can be described by pseudo first-order kinetics. The adsorption rate constant obtained from the study was  $0.0393$  min<sup>-1</sup>. The free adsorption was
