This data will be used in two main ways. First, it is used to make improvements to the core ball physics, enabling a more immersive experience for new and returning players. For example, the player-controlled Dribbling mode now has better accuracy. Second, it will be used for the improved Atmospheres and Weather Systems, helping you to experience more realistic football match conditions. Let's dive in and find out more about FIFA 22 and what changes are coming to the game. This content is hosted on an external platform, which will only display it if you accept targeting cookies. In two key areas of gameplay - tackling and shooting - there is a noticeable improvement in the game when looking at minute-by-minute detail. In this screen shot, you can see how much of an improvement there has been from the proof-of-concept videos featured here last year. The new tackling models don't just make running into someone feel more authentic, but also makes it a lot more realistic. What's more, this year tackling animations now include the five key actions that you can use with your defender, which really help to make the action much more exciting. Of course, tackling is still mostly about visualizing how effective your physical attacks are, but the improvements to the physics mean that your hits are much more satisfying to the player. The shot accuracy is also dramatically improved, which is of key importance when playing shooting modes. The goalkeepers are the focus of the new physics improvements this year too. FIFA's 2K series has been using "HyperMotion" since FIFA 19, and the goalkeepers feel more dynamic and reactive now. The motion capture system now works better with the new physics so that there is no lag when using the new CG character models. New "experimental" character models were also added this year, which help to add more character to the goalkeeper models. Further enhancements to the goalkeeper models - both new and old - also help to improve the overall feel of the goalkeeper animations and improve the player models themselves. This has been a key focus for 2K Sports this year, and the new animations feel much more natural and refined. 2K Sports has also worked to improve the animations of the players in a number of other areas this year, such as the Running and Jumping actions. Player body and foot movements also appear more natural, and the execution of those actions has been improved.
