An Arthroscopic Latarjet (ALJ) procedure is usually indicated in the treatment of anterior glenoid bone loss. This bone graft serves as a scaffold for bone and cartilage in order to restore the glenoid bone stock and to simultaneously repair bone loss. This procedure provides a stable foundation for subsequent arthroscopic rotator cuff repair. We present a case of an anti-acromial rotator cuff tear with bone loss involving the infraspinatus muscle insertion on the superolateral aspect of the superior glenoid rim. The patient underwent an ALI with a costotransversectomy and subacromial bursectomy. The patient then subsequently underwent a successful arthroscopic rotator cuff repair. This case illustrates that in cases of giant or massive (supraspinatus [SSP] tear) rotator cuff tears, with bone loss, one can perform an arthroscopic ALI and then follow with a subsequent arthroscopic rotator cuff repair.Q: Time travel in Star Trek TOS episode In the episode "Menagerie" they claim that they have gone back e79caf774b
