Thus, we conclude that because it was the intent of the law to preserve a centralized court system, the Juvenile Court should have exclusive jurisdiction over the minor's case at all times. The dissent would have us look to the existence of another remedy to determine the intent of the legislature. However, the existence of a remedy does not negate the clear intent of the legislature to maintain the *352 current system of juvenile court jurisdiction in cases involving juvenile delinquency. The intent of the legislature in enacting the General Delinquency Law was that the law should provide for juvenile delinquency proceedings and that the juvenile court would have jurisdiction, after all the other available remedies had been exhausted, to hear and determine a case of juvenile delinquency. The intent of the General Delinquency Law and its subsequent amendments was to establish a judicial system in which the rights of the parties, particularly those of a juvenile, were to be protected and the punishment as well as the fairness of a particular case would be determined by a unified court. The dissent's suggested remedy would permit a juvenile who is subject to a delinquency proceeding to escape the protections and procedures of juvenile court jurisdiction and thereby destroy one of the primary purposes of that system of justice. In conclusion, we note that even if there were another remedy, a judge of the Superior Court could, under our constitution, hear the minor's case in the Superior Court. The Superior Court is one of the four general trial courts of this Commonwealth. Article 5, § 6,

Constitution of Pennsylvania; Commonwealth v. Samuel, 413 Pa. 340, 196 A. 2d 347 (1964). It is one of the eighty-one "general and
