Organize your client deadlines or credit and debit events After selecting a data sheet, you can set a new deadline with an expiration date, credit or debit type. The only real difference here is that an amount of money cannot be set for the expiry date type. Otherwise, all other text boxes that can be filled out with info are unlocked. You can set a description, match the deadline with a client or supplier, set a credit or debit amount, opt for single or recurring deadline mode, set the deadline date by consulting a calendar, as well as write helpful notes. Manage clients and suppliers, print or save all info It's possible to create as many deadlines as you want, edit their properties or remove entries from the datasheet, mark past deadline with strikethough instead of removing their entries, or resort to a search function when dealing with large amounts of information. There's also an option for deleting all deadlines past up until the currently selected date ("Tools" menu). The clients and suppliers can be created on the spot when adding a new record, or from the "View" menu, where it's possible to make modifications (name, notes) and print the list. Speaking of printing options, the entire timetable of information can be printed. Otherwise, you can save it to a plain text document (.txt). Easy-to-use managing tool for deadlines and accounts It worked smoothly on Windows 10 in our tests, without any OS compatibility issues, and carried out tasks quickly. On the other hand, some users might not be thrilled by the lack of cloud syncing options. Nevertheless, Munia delivers a simple and straightforward solution for managing deadlines, credit and debit accounts in digital format, without having to worry about complex configuration settings.
