selective deposition of a metallic coating on substrates. The production of articles of the kind in which a layer of a ceramic material is bonded to a ceramic substrate by chemical bonding to the ceramic substrate is known. According to a known method of producing articles of this kind, a sinterable blend of a ceramic material in the form of fine particles, may be prepared and then moulded to form a green body, and this green body may be sintered to form a green body of the ceramic material, which may be removed from the mother mould. It is believed that articles produced by this method are prone to shrinkage which makes this method relatively slow. An alternative process has been described in GB-A-2 123 038. According to this process, the surface of a moulded preformed ceramic body is treated with a ceramic material which is reactive with the ceramic material of the preformed body to form a film. The preformed body and the film are then heated at temperatures above the melting point of the ceramic material, and when the film is formed on the preformed body, a ceramic moulded body is produced. Although it is believed that this is a faster process than the sintering process, the film is produced from a material which is not chemically compatible with the ceramic of the preformed body. As a result, the two-phase composite body of the preformed body and the film may be prone to breaking up. DE-A-39 31 536 discloses a method of bonding a layer of a ceramic material to a ceramic body by melting at least one of the ceramic body and the ceramic material to form a molten bond between the two materials. The two materials are then moved to a position in which they are in contact with a surface to be coated, and in that position they are fused by scanning with heat. Although this method is believed to be a Pachadlela Dvdripmarathi[Sach004]This is a proposal for a global type of a Collaborative Global Type-2 Diabetes Mellitus (GDM) Study. Inclusion of participants from the same or similar ethnic background in this type of multicenter studies will better limit inter-ethnic and inter-inducers effect.

Establishment of such a study is crucial to better control the global burden of type 2 diabetes mellitus. Its importance is supported by the fact that with the relatively recent establishment of the global burden of type 2 diabetes mellitus, the need for GDM type study is, and will continue to be, necessary. GDM is a major risk factor for cardiovascular disease. In an international GDM study, the increased cardiovascular risk factors observed in the offspring would be missed in the absence of a common study center, which is the main objective of our proposal. We will address this concern by having the study center (Diet-Heart Study, Denmark) be located in a very different environment

(Greenland) from the participating centers (Nordic countries). In addition, as a proof of concept, we will address the inadequacy of the use of existing genotyping material by genotyping all participants with our newly developed genotyping chip. This study will be performed in Greenland. The Greenlandic population has a European (Inuit) origin. They are still a remote culture geographically and historically with a strong local sense of identity and proud Nordic features. These characteristics can make the Greenlandic population a uniquely distinct, ethnically and culturally, study population. The infrequent occurrence of type 2 diabetes mellitus in Greenland could be a consequence of low prevalence of risk factors in this population. Our hypothesis is that the prevalence of cardiovascular risk factors in Greenland will be lower in adults with GDM offspring than in subjects without offspring with GDM. The expected results will provide information to the

At 8:20 a.m. last Saturday, the phone rang at the Hoof Management Service of Central Minnesota (HMSCM) in Chaska. At the other end of the line, a deer caller wanted to report that hundreds of deer were stuck in trees. The caller said she had been receiving calls from residents concerned about the deer. In one instance, one caller said he received a call from someone who claimed that they were a neighbor and that they were having a problem with 15 deer that were stuck in their yard. The HMSCM is a part of the wildlife rehabilitation service that the Humane Society of the United States (HSUS) offers for deer around the state. There are many species of deer that HMSCM receives, such as elk, sika deer, mule deer and white-tailed deer. "It's horrible," said John Geistlinger, manager of HMSCM. "The problem is that deer are so unpredictable. "They can put a tree or a fence in their way, and it is very hard to get them out." When a caller tells HMSCM that there are deer stuck in a tree, it is an alarm, and the wildlife and law enforcement authorities are notified. The caller is expected to be there to get the deer, according to HMSCM's Director of Operations, Gene Brazener. "The person in the tree has an advantage over us in that we don't know exactly where the deer are, but they can see them," he said. ♦
