Lysine acetylation in the Escherichia coli signal-recognition particle-ribonucleoprotein complex. The Escherichia coli signal recognition particle-ribonucleoprotein (SRP-RNPs) complex is the minimal targeting apparatus of ribosomes and secures binding and integration of nascent proteins. A general post-translational modification, protein lysine acetylation, was investigated in E. coli SRP-RNPs. Two hundred and eighty lysine residues were identified by mass spectrometry, ranging from 4.5 to 27 acetylated lysines per SRP-RNP. Many modified lysines were clustered within L16, L24 and L33. These three proteins share two lysine residues, L24 and L33, not acetylated and two other, L16 and L24, modified by two acetylated lysines, suggesting multiple sites of acetylation. Lysine acetylation is detected at the hinge between L16 and L23 and between L32 and the SRP RNA domain, where the ssU-mRNA-SRP interaction occurs. These lysines are clustered in β -sheets or loops of the junction structure of the ssU-mRNA-SRP complex, where they may act as an anchor point for SRP. Lysine acetylation was verified by Western blot for L16, L24, L33 and the SRP RNA. Our data confirm that post-translational protein lysine acetylation is a prevalent modification in E. coli SRP-RNP. The distribution of lysine acetylation suggests that the acetylation of lysines may regulate this protein-protein interaction and play a role in ribosome targeting.

Thanks to Cockatrice for sending this to me. Microsoft Games Lead John Schappert on Xbox LIVE Arcade's New Licensing Model and What's Next for the Xbox's Console & PC Games Strategies - GameSpot(Schappert, Lead Director of Marketing for Xbox Live Arcade stated in an IGN interview that Microsoft is doing away with traditional contract agreements with developers, instead signing a group license with all the major industry players. We also know that Microsoft asked for exclusivity for some of their titles on the service. John then went on to say that Microsoft was looking to get more titles out there and to get gamers more excited about the service. Over the last few months, we have seen several titles released on Xbox LIVE Arcade, and John states that Microsoft will be "doubling down" on the service, with more Xbox Live Arcade titles to be released later this year. John also states that while individual games work as an experiment, a console is an "ideal" vehicle for gaming, and he believes that a console can be a "truly immersive game" experience. So, it seems a bad time to pick an argument with him! As for sales for Xbox LIVE Arcade, John states that Microsoft is selling XBLA games better than other platforms because of the savings the company is able to achieve from publishing for other platforms. In an Xbox LIVE Arcade games that are sold on the service, developers don't go through the process of contact agreements and instead are able to pick and choose which publishers they wish to work with. We know that Microsoft is planning to launch their own downloadable game service for the Xbox 360 later this year. While there are currently games

published that will be submitted to Microsoft's service, it will be a direct competitor to the Xbox LIVE Arcade games service. IGN had a chance to ask Mr. Schappert about
