A to-do list manager, powered by sublime and tmux, with an emphasis on simplicity and productivity. Leadpass is a very simple, but also very powerful, password manager. It's written in Swift and uses the iOS platform as a basis for its design. It's main goal is to provide many features that other more common iOS password management apps may lack, and to still be very easy to use. Leadpass Password Management If you're looking to use a simple and easy to use password manager then Leadpass is the right app for you. It's really very basic, but also extremely powerful. It features sync for multiple devices, a reliable and fast password creation algorithm, and also a very good tutorial system. Leadpass Interface Unlike other password managers, Leadpass has a clean, and very simple interface. The navigation bar has also been kept to a minimum, with only three options being present at any time. The first option is the 'pass number'. This is the number of a password you've already saved. If the number is black it means that the password is not yet saved. You can always change this colour to the desired colour. Once clicked, the button will change colour to green (or as many times as there are saved passwords), or red (or as many times as there are deleted passwords). Each button has a drop down menu, which allows you to either 'Search' or 'Manage' a saved password. Pass Number The second option is the 'pass data' option. If a password has already been saved, the data corresponding to the password will be listed here. This is the most important option if you're looking for your password, as it means the best results when searching for it. If it's not in the list, it means that your password has been deleted. To get to the data, select it and the usual drop down menu will appear. Now select

'Delete'. If there are no deleted passwords, the field will not have a drop down menu. Password Number
If a password is not yet saved, or there are no passwords on the device, the third option is the 'new password' button. If you don't know the strength of the password you're trying to save, the app will guide you through the process. By selecting 'Generate', you'll get the new password. The app will then automatically save it to the list of saved passwords. Settings The settings menu is very easy to access. There
