Hey everyone, thanks for checking out my soundtrack for Guardian Heroes. I hope you like the music. Enjoy and please feel free to leave me a recommendation on what you think about the song you think it is and what you think about how I've done it. Sometimes it can be really hard to put yourself out there, share your music and also make it sound good on a soundtrack. Also, please enjoy your time with Guardian Heroes!

Retro is a very good runner! Retro Turbo: Retro Turbo is the mega-retro runner! Return To Forever: Return To Forever is a runner which was made in time for arcade games. Shining Light: Shining Light is a runner with retro graphics. Tomb Runner: Tomb Runner is a fast-paced runner with multiple challenging stages. Tricky Runner: Tricky Runner is a platform runner where your skills as a runner are your strength. Big Board Emulator: Big Board Emulator is an isometric board game. Monolith: Monolith is an action-packed side-scrolling adventure game. Roxx: Roxx is a 2D action platformer. The objective is to return the stolen legendary treasure. The game runs on WinNES on the Android (can be run on any WinNES emulator too). It's a simplistic, free (with ads) game but with a lot of good graphics. Use the commands on the emulator to start the game (menu), pause, resume and exit. The goal is to reach the end of the track. Each game has a different soundtrack and different obstacles to overcome. The app can be downloaded from the Google Play Store. The game comes in multiple languages. In the process of preparing the game, an artist discovered he couldn't make the game play in English. The game and story are in English, the description is not. The game has two levels and one song. Level one is available in English but not the song. Music is an optional feature. More details of the game and the artist (who is a programmer and not an artist):

What's new:

: How to deal with Anxiety Imagine that you have been invited to go to a cocktail party. You arrive earlier than the event and go out to have a look for the furniture. There are some lovely couches in one of the rooms. You give that room a look and find it very pleasant. Then you enter another room. In there you see some tables with a lot of papers on them and also some beautiful pictures on the walls. You have an irresistible urge to visit that room. The door is ajar and there is only one person, a man, standing there. On his left arm he has a platter with a glass on it. On his right hand is a cup which he takes, turns off the tap and hands to you. There is not even a trace of advertising, the man seems a little disconcerted at having all these people in his house, but he does not seem to mind. What is striking is that there are no chairs in that room. However, it looks like a room where people are always sitting. You are immediately drawn to this room. You join the man in that room and begin enjoying yourself very much. Here is a certain point to reflect on: how much anxiety is generated by a fake situation like that? It is a strong and powerful paradox that the less you feel anxious while avoiding a person or a situation that you feel will cause fear or anxiety, the more fearful and anxious you become. Or in other words: By not visiting the room that caused anxiety you not only land up in a room where anxiety is generated but you also meet a person who will induce fear or anxiety. Let us now go to the concept of avoidance. Let us call it avoidance of examination. In that person neither the time nor the place has been fixed yet. It has been proposed spontaneously; the whole situation has created anxiety. It may be a partner who poses a question too many, or it is a situation that you are not psychologically prepared for or it is a situation in general. Situation without time or place has been reduced to this: You have been summoned by someone or are invited to attend a party (since either the person or the party plan is the problem, the name of the situation may be a little redundant) and then put in a stressful predicament: An examination. The examination may be academic or the examination may be a psychological examination. The situation has become a threat because either the person or the event proposes it. However a problem does
