In 1980, when I was in 8th grade, I wrote a paper for our history class about the first shot fired in the interstellar conflict that would leave mankind earthbound. I thought it was a minor contribution to human history, but what I didn't see was the larger picture that I was seeing. I wasn't connected to the larger conflict, there was no one aware of what I was doing, but I had changed the course of mankind's future. After the nuclear destruction of the old Earth, the denizens of Earth were forced to develop the technology to travel to other habitable planets. I was the first person to plant the seed of the railgun in mankind's collective brain. The railgun I conceived of as a single piece of metal long enough to aim the projectile, no larger than a human finger and able to accelerate the projectile to nearly half the speed of light. Although I wanted only peace and sent my invention to others, mankind would not be spared, and the first shots of the nearly forgotten second interstellar war were fired with the Russian railgun and pulverized city on the Moon. Odder than any war, this conflict was fought with insects. The insects born from the splattered soil of the Moon, irradiated by the nuclear missiles, and infected by the radionucleotides that remain from the bombardment. Since the second war, humanity has been forced into constant war due to the unearthly infestations that they cannot control and the galactic terraforming programs that have rendered the once beautiful and fertile planets sterile. Now, in present day, you are part of a self-defense squad created to deal with the new crop of insectoids with the railguns that fire tiny missiles that go beyond the speed of light. As an officer in the militia, you're on a mission of peace, taking out the already-saturated mecha and exterminating any approaching insects that pose a threat.

GameplayA17: Haunting at Rybalka Lodge (PFRPG) In this horror adventure, you're playing the part of a new recruit in the militia, your mission is to go to the Rybalka Lodge to investigate a report of a group of bikers terrorizing a local strip club, with the intention to extort some money from the owner. This is a relatively uneventful trip for you, but the closer you get to the nightclub, the more you can't help

OPLNB "One of our senior candidates in Oman, came on a family visit to the UK last month. We had heard she was married to an Omani, but we could barely pry a name out of her. When the offer to visit the UK came, we thought we had missed the boat. Six months later she sends us this letter. A little history, there is a small minority of people in Oman, who will not get work unless they marry an English person. She was on a waiting list and was working. The family visit happened, she got married, and now when they send her a letter, she is expected to get work. It is a tough game. " Jana Rennie July 22, 2012 Synopsis This is difficult to read. A woman who had worked for 12 years in the oil industry and loved her job, is being made redundant on account of a ban on foreign workers. Journalist Victoria Brittain returns to Oman's beat after some recent international successes to find the road to freedom is blocked by a complex maze of problems and intractable local officials. Victoria meets Jillian, a woman anxious to escape her OPLNB (One Person Limited Name Bureau) prisoner of debt and marry an Englishman. Her strategy involves swimming the Channel in February and running up to 100 miles a day on the Salalah-Al Suwayhani Trail each morning and returning with her suitcases full of gifts for her new in-laws. She wants to give them a shock, and make them realise she needs to be with an Englishman to feel safe. Will Jillian be able to make it to freedom without being fired? Three people, one fate On a scorching hot day in December in Al Suwayhani, an outback village in the mountains of southern Oman, we would normally look forward to having an hour-long siesta to avoid the stifling midday heat. But this day had a different feel to it. I planned to spend the afternoon in the town of Sur in southern Oman; watching the Formula 1 Nations Cup races at the Olympic Citi Field, and having a beer with some of my colleagues. Instead, I listened to the streets by the Al Quara mosque and drinking ice cold cans of Mango beer. I had a map of the country pulled up on my laptop, and despite being vague as to the exact route, plotted out a route to Baghdad in Iraq. I would be back in Al
