DryFET: A little hardware, lots of power - cwan ===== coderdude Nice. I'd like to see this with a stronger, smoother, cheaper, more flexible wristband. I'd pay \$30 for it, but probably \$50. ~~~ jpmc Another comment mentioned it would be neat to have some RF transponders to help track you. The dryfett idea is pretty neat too. New Hyundai Kona battery cells fall short of U.S. energy efficiency targets In an interview with Gizmodo, Dr. Woo-Hyun Huh, a research associate with Kia Motors America, said that a prototype of the 2017 Kona "is no longer using Li-ion cells." "We've been testing them," he said. "The cells at the moment are not even touching the federal efficiency standards." The Kona battery is a rear-wheel drive, three-row crossover, according to the Kia website.Q: Which database to use with ASP.NET MVC? I am building a website which will have a blog and a store. I am new to ASP.NET MVC and I am wondering what is the best database to use with my webpages. I have searched for database systems but I couldn't find anything which satisfies my needs. Needs Can I use multiple databases on the same website? Is it possible to easily generate views from models? A: What are you using SQL Server and ASP.NET MVC as a .NET web site? Why don't you use Entity Framework to model the data? There is really no reason to use multiple databases. You can even use a database outside of the .NET platform (e.g. Oracle, MySQL, SQLite). With EF you can map data from the database to the models using data annotations. Models are lightweight C# classes and the mapping is done in code. However, the generated views can be customized with partial classes. Agreement and disputes: the legal implications of parental arbitration. since ive lost the cap from the box that came with it so i cant verify this but the long puissance came with it as well? You remember that record play of a music box that played sample loops and was round? I liked it but not as much as the one called loop. Both were broken down to pieces for the binary repretation however. The pipelooop was one strong hit. They are not working and I dont want to make 100 kbplay files. Yea, it was the same company, I can't remember any name. The sample files would be HUGE to make! :o Maybe there is a way people here could pm a copy to yourself and share it? Perhaps as a PM! Both were broken down to pieces for the binary repretation however. The pipelooop was one strong hit. They are not working and I dont want to make 100 kbplay files. You can still make loop files. Check out Looped 'Lub' - I believe the link is in the first post - its looping songs from the C64! They are also converting the pocket mini loop files for the MVC game - although it isnt as obvious. It does not really matter as this is my first entry and I have to gather some cool loops. I am currently making pocket crunchers and will make several jobs for people here. I need to have a mvc project with a code behind and use powershell to run this tool. 4 Mich. App. 216 (1966) 144 N.W.2d 20 GROSSE v. FORD MOTOR COMPANY. Docket No. 615. Michigan Court of Appeals. Q: minifying a resource and optimizing Suppose I have a very large(200mb+) program that I'm going to minify and optimize using various tools. My program consists of ~50 KLOC (mostly javascript.) Should I do this: Normalize all files/directories into one large file(NPM/Bower compatible?) Build all separately by minifying and then combine them with various tooling, such as UglifyJS, and post process(rename, conditional comments/comments removal, etc.) A: If the individual files are all in the same file tree, then you'll be fine. Uglify is the typical bundling tool for minifying JS. Post-process cleanup is something that you should definitely do once you've minified. I have a collection of scripts that I use when minifying my JS. Uglify is of course a key part of the process. I use UglifyJS with Brotli compression. That way the results are smaller and hopefully your users won't encounter any issues when downloading. Q: Why does the equation look weird? I want to show in my lecture that  $x \cdot \cos x = \frac{1 + \sin x}{2} \cdot \cos x$  It looks weird to me that just one factor of  $x$  was extracted from it. Is there something I am missing here? A: You're not doing anything wrong with the factorisation. What you're trying to show is that  $x \cdot \cos x = \frac{1 + \sin x}{2} \cdot \cos x$  We can write this as  $x \cdot \cos x = \frac{x + \sin x}{2}$  Taking the derivative of each side of this gives that  $x \cdot \cos x = \frac{1}{2} \cdot x$
