And governments worldwide came to the brink of default. After months of fractious debate and brinksmanship over the U.S. budget, the debt ceiling was reached. The United States has until October 17 to strike a deal with its creditors or it faces a first-ever default. Why this drama? The Treasury says U.S. tax revenues are so low that only $55 billion of the $3.1 trillion in tax revenues is expected this year. The government is borrowing $140 billion a month to pay for government spending, spending it twice over on interest on that debt, while much of the rest of the government is, as a result, waiting tables or filling potholes. Meanwhile, the Treasury has $16.3 trillion in debt already held by the public. Deficits are projected to reach a record $1.2 trillion this year and next before slowing to an unsustainable $2.5 trillion by 2022. The Congressional Budget Office recently revised its forecast for deficits down to $1.7 trillion from $2.1 trillion in 2012 and even lower in 2013. That means the government deficit will exceed $1 trillion in a couple of years. (MORE: Why All That Talk of Default in August Was Actually a Big, Hilarious, Peaceful Accident) So why all the drama? Why did the risk of default loom into August? What are all the factors that could undermine the U.S. fiscal situation? First, there is the risk that the U.S. economy would take a dramatic hit if interest rates on government debt double, as seems likely. At some point in the future the Federal Reserve will slow its bond purchases to normalize monetary policy, at which point it may raise interest rates to rein in inflation, potentially raising the rate on U.S. government debt. The current 10-year Treasury rate 6d1f23a050
