President Donald Trump has boasted about the strength of his economy and many economic statistics have shown the recent increase in the U.S. consumer price index. But the latest reading from the Labor Department's inflation report showed a 2.6 percent uptick in April 2018, after a similar 3 percent increase in March. The Labor Department reported that the average price of goods and services increased in April by 2.6 percent, after being unchanged in March. The cost of services, including transportation, food, and entertainment, all rose, but the cost of goods, which includes everything from food to computers to clothing, decreased by 0.4 percent. The inflation readings follow comments made by President Donald Trump on April 13, when he told reporters that April had been a "tremendous month." The president said the 8 percent increase in the rate of economic growth "means there's no inflation whatsoever right now." The Commerce Department had previously released data showing that the economy grew at 4.1 percent from January to March
