towards the Fourth of July, we can be pretty sure that we'll be able to enjoy a spectacular fireworks show. Now that that's out of the way, we want to take some time to set up a backyard barbecue or pool party that won't be marred by a bunch of serious fireworks injuries. The good news is that you can set up your backyard so that fireworksrelated injuries are rare, simple to fix, and relatively easy to avoid altogether. Here are the tips you need to keep your parties safe and your neighbors happy. Do a quick home inspection before you celebrate We're sure that you've experienced a bathroom pipe bursting during a party, followed by a huge mess of dirty gray water and expensive damage to your kitchen floor. But a back-to-school inspection gives you a chance to keep your house safe and your party a guaranteed success, preventing these common and costly damages. Your home inspection includes these things: Floor drains Leaking pipes Sinks and showers Plumbing, electrical, and gas problems HVAC/hot water systems Bathroom plumbing and drains Fireplaces, doors, and windows Check out our infographic to find out more about home inspections. Fill the proper amount of water in your fire pits The biggest factor in a fire pit exploding? Too much water in it. We're not saying you should load it up, but do keep in mind that the volume of water in your fire pit is directly related to how hot the fire pit will get, and how much risk it poses to others nearby. According to the 6d1f23a050
