In Illustrator, I have created several swatches on my working files and now, every time I create a new swatch, I get a bunch of the unwanted swatches that I don't want to have. How can I remove all swatches except the one I have selected and created, all at once? A: You can select all swatches in a given document using Shift+A, and then simply delete them (right click, Delete All). The present invention relates to tool sets in general and more particularly to a tool set which is made up of a plurality of tools for a predetermined task which can be handled conveniently and individually and which can be operated with a minimum of effort and time. For a long time the tool sets made up of different tools for a predetermined task have been known. It is evident that the great variety of different tools available on the market make it impossible for anyone to have a tool set which is completely tailored to his needs. In the known tool sets the tools can be supplied either as a unitary set or as separate units. When the individual tools are supplied as a unitary set, the tools are coupled together with some kind of retaining means and are stored within a storage means. As a result of the storing means the tools can be removed and held individually to carry out any task. In such tool sets each tool is gripped with its gripping surface facing the storage means. When a tool is gripped by its gripping surface, the tool cannot be secured within the gripping surface with the aid of the retaining means. As a result of this, the tools can easily become detached from one another or even from the retaining means and therefore cannot be handled individually in a satisfactory manner. With the aid of such known tool sets it is
