In Account class I have: User.find(auth.id) In User I have def self.find_by_id(id) find_by_id(id) end How do I make this find_by_id method usable in my Account class? I don't want to just copy and paste the find_by_id method in every class that needs it, because it's not good practice. A: Generally a method like this would be implemented in some sort of ActiveRecord class, e.g. in a User class. Such a class could be used like this: user = User.find(1) user.account # -> # If a person has_many account, they could do: user.accounts # -> [, ...] You can't really move the method into the Account class, but you could implement it in a module or in some common library module like activesupport (like it is doing the job of User). A: The rule of thumb is that the User class should be a model class. If you want to use a method from User in Account, the method should be defined in User. If it's just find_by_id the technique you're using is sound. The Redeemer: Globalist's Catch-22 The Redeemer: Globalist's Catch-22 The Redeemer: Globalists 6d1f23a050
