thanks for sharing this post, i found a little glitch on hack #3, there are a few titles in that link, one of them is not good for the main title, and it will make the app title wrong, but, make sure the hack only running on telegram itself, try to re run the title after changing the hack, it will fix it. so the "quick tip" i actually think is a valid lesson in general. if you are ever in a situation where you are giving an opinion or advice, it is very important to tell the person why you are giving the advice. they should then understand why it is the right advice for them. if you tell a 13 year old "don't do drugs" in a stern voice, they are likely to think that the reason is because of the negative experience they have had with drugs, a proper explanation would have allowed the child to appreciate the fact that people should not do drugs for many other reasons, such as recovery rates. i also want to mention that i know about the dangers of exposure to certain chemicals in tobacco. even though i have never used it, i am fully aware of the fact that its harmful. the purpose of creating these pills was to make as many people as possible addicted to nicotine. so they created a drug in tobacco, then created a pill form to be addictive, and then they hid that fact from the public. i played with this a lot (as well as similar apps like fuzzmaster including one by my friend @lionfactory). i like the analog sound of these.

however, i find the fader/panning is very sensitive to whatever i'm currently playing. this makes it very difficult to control volume if i'm playing drums and vocals. you can find this "sensitive" nature in some other hybrid instruments, like the lmms drummer. a common complaint about the current It this is the same problem even in the old school lfos and samplers. other devs know this, and i hope they fix it. i use it now with very little panning, but if i accidentally pan it, it's got to be stopped and the playing to restarted.
