Lock down sensitive accounts or devices as the hacker gains access to them with a method such as keylogging, and all the important accounts become compromised. You can read more about how to protect yourself against social-media hacks and address various potential risks in the article following this one. Finally, make sure all of your accounts are password protected on their login portals, as someone having physical access to your device or network could get at your logins, and start creating additional accounts, changing passwords and logging into your accounts without your direct involvement. Who can tell where a hack comes from? This hack could be related to the data breach that tech giant Apple experienced last year. In this case, the hacker may have gained access to the IP address linked to your account and got the access token associated with your account. If the hacker was present at the time you used the credentials, they could have seen the credentials being typed out, and took advantage of that. Unlike the passive type of hacking that involves reading, logging in and changing passwords, this active method involves taking over the phone itself to execute the hack, which is much more personal and requires physical access to the phone or device.

Dont get distracted by email with follow up emails, and keep your eye on online shopping and social media. Hacks are possible if youre not careful. Follow the following steps to set up an account lockout for your email and phone. Protect your account details and device information from those who might try and get access to your account, including leaking it to third parties by using complex passwords, strong passcode, making sure to keep your phone turned off, and by limiting access to unauthorized devices.

7/5/2016 I thought that I had it under control and everything was copacetic well, it was only 3 days after hacking my whatsapp account and my partners phone through watsapp that I realised that the hacker had gained access to my computer. You can use the same password you used to access your personal email account to access your online banking account. And we've seen massive credit card fraud just from accessing Facebook or Gmail passwords. Obviously, they won't ask for your password as a Facebook or Gmail password is part of your personal logins. But they might ask for your password to third-party apps and services you use, such as websites you visit, or services like PayPal. Some of the times I've seen this happen is when a hacker gets an anonymous email account that they can use to impersonate the admin of the account. They fake a response from the admin saying to click a link in the email to upgrade to pro, or whatever. Then, the hacker logs into your account. But if that's too expensive, you can also use Google's built-in Password Resolver to reset passwords via the Google Account Security page. This is probably the safest way to reset any Google password, and in fact, it's probably the only way. In other words, it's really important you ask yourself, "What would I do if someone else got hold of my Gmail password?" If you're not careful, they might not even have to do anything to you, or your other accounts, to get access to everything in them. Like a car seat, two-step verification is just a backup. It ensures that even if someone does hack your email or your Google or Dropbox password, they still can't use it to access your phone or banks.
