providers should encourage patients to seek genetic counseling if they are considering or considering starting treatment for gender dysphoria or if they have a history of gonadectomy. genetic testing for mosaicism (e.g., turner syndrome) should be obtained in all adolescents considering genital surgery or if clinically indicated to exclude mosaicism. appropriate referral may be required for genetic counseling. provider-performed genetic testing should not be a reason for a patient to undergo non-genetic evaluation for gender dysphoria without independent agreement of the patient and genetic counseling. providers should support patients, families, and communities as they confront concerns about mental health and gender identity. support of patients can help them to adapt to the changes that gender transition entails, such as changes in personal appearance, clothing, and behavior. it can also help to address challenges in schools, faith communities, or other social settings. for use with static builds, to build any application depends on qt (yes, even if you don't want qt). the feature set is limited, so you should not rely on this when using dynamic builds, as package names will be different and the build process is highly unpredictable. returns the build number of the latest dev build. the full story on why this release is significant can be found on the dev kits powered by new tool: lattices and new mips and arm processors . if you're using homebrew , you should be able to upgrade smoothly with brew update and brew upgrade.

the subset of packages which do not have the release variable set have to be distributed for each distribution separately. some distributions have to make modifications to the files on which the release variable is based (using and/or directly copying the release files from debian). you must look at the upstream projects, preferably use the projects own repos if possible. for ubuntu based distributions, prefer using ubuntu specific package(s) instead of the debian packages. for other distributions, other than ubuntu, use distro-specific package(s) if possible. in general, you should not submit packages to debian that do not work with those maintained in debian. the debian packaging system is open, and anyone (including you) can make changes which are then submitted upstream (to you or elsewhere). similarly, debian does not validate your packages (it is assumed that you can do that, if need be, yourself). the package tracking system allows one to send an e-mail to the list whenever a package is changed or uploaded so that others can check what the changes are. each of the above commands can be run from anywhere on the file system and run from the command line will run the script in your home directory and run it as root. if you want, and it seems appropriate, you can run from anywhere, edit the file and use the chown and chmod commands to create owner group and permissions as you wish. note: if you dont have root access, it is generally not recommended to run any of the above scripts as root. you can however set the environment variable java_home to a system based install or other install of java you wish to use to run the script. it isnt necessary for it to be the same version of java run by the container 5ec8ef588b
