SEOUL (Reuters) - A North Korean soldier walked up to a South Korean restaurant in the heavily fortified border zone between the countries and killed two others before he was gunned down by security forces, police said on Wednesday. The shooting took place at about 3.15 a.m. (0115 GMT) on Tuesday at the restaurant in the "Triangle" area of the border zone, which separates North and South Korea, an official at the South Korean defense ministry said. The soldiers fired at security forces who responded with shots and one of them died at the scene, while the other was taken to hospital for medical aid, but was pronounced dead, according to the official, who was not authorised to speak to reporters about the shooting. The soldier was immediately killed by security forces, according to Kim Byeong-ok, the deputy director general of the South Korean Joint Chiefs of Staff, who was briefed on the shooting. The incident is the second deadly confrontation involving North Korean soldiers in recent days. On Monday, a North Korean soldier fired on South Korean soldiers who were patrolling in the area, killing two of them. On Tuesday, a North Korean soldier shot and killed a North Korean guard and a South Korean guard on Tuesday. The North Korean soldier had begun walking towards the South Korean restaurant, about 50 meters away from the border fence, at about 3 a.m., and was spotted by surveillance cameras. He then left the area and crossed into the North, according to the South Korean official. The soldier then returned to the fence, took out a gun and began to fire, the official said.

Google is defending its record on abortion with an anti-abortion website because it didn't turn up on users' searches. In all, Google ranks abortion as the top health-related term that, when spoken, most often leads users to other information about abortion. The site, number1abortion.org, ranks "abortion," "pro-life," and "abortion-rights" on a Google search engine as the top three terms that lead users to the abortion-rights organization NARAL Pro-Choice America.
